Chest Pain of Unclear Etiology

1. You have been seen for chest pain. The cause of your pain is not yet known.
2. Your doctor has learned about your medical history, examined you, and checked any tests that were done. Still, it is unclear why you are having pain. The doctor thinks there is only a very small chance that your pain is caused by a life-threatening condition. Later, your primary care doctor might do more tests or check you again.
